To determine how much roll a room will need: Add together the foot wall width, and multiply by height. Divide that by 30 – the average square footage of an American-made roll – or by 25%, if you are using a European paper that was born. Subtract one roll half per normal window that same size and door. You now have a working shutdown; add a scroll for good measures (with future patches) – a little more if your model has great repeat to match. If you're in your calculations, draw a picture of each wall, including measurements and positions within and size of all the windows and doors. Take the design from your wallpaper provider. An experienced seller can offer advice on how much list you need to buy. When you place your wallpaper order, also buy paste compatible with a paste brush for standard paper, or a water box to prepare paper.
